After You Fall, There's Nothing You Can Do "After You Fall, There's Nothing You Can Do" is a song by American rock band Panic! at the Disco from their third studio album, Too Weird to Live, Too Rare to Die! (2008). It was released as the second single from the album on March 11, 2009, by the record label Fueled by Ramen. "After You Fall, There's Nothing You Can Do" was written by frontman Brendon Urie and guitarist Ryan Ross, and was produced by frequent Panic! at the Disco collaborator, Benji Mendelson. The song was one of the first Panic! at the Disco songs to be released after signing with Fueled by Ramen, following "The Ballad of Mona Lisa" which was released on their 2006 album, A Fever You Can't Sweat Out. The song was described by the band's frontman Brendon Urie as "pretty poppy and fun" and features Urie's powerful vocals, as well as synthesizers and guitar riffs. The song has also been compared to the song "Walk Away Renée", from the 2011 album Pretty. Obligatory's Evan Sawdey called the song "a sprawling song about first love and uncertainty, like a Beastie Boys-on-meth-riffs breakdown." "After You Fall, There's Nothing You Can Do" is Panic! at the Disco's first song that does not contain the word "die" in the title or refrain. Music video A music video was directed by Jonathan Craven and was shot in Los Angeles, California, in January 2009. It premiered on March 11, 2009, on MuchMusic. It begins with a three-year-old girl entering a room where Brendon Urie is sitting. He comes over to her and tries to cuddle her. When he tries to hold her, she pulls away. She then runs out of the room with the boy chasing after her. Brendon Urie follows her out of the room and through the hallway, eventually going into a room where many people have gathered, including his band members. He is then seen in the room, playing guitar and singing the song. Track listing UK Digital download "After You Fall, There's Nothing You Can Do" – 3:29 UK CD
